Comparison of three HIV-1 diagnostic assays and corresponding viral load values in a large reference panel of serum samples: a collaborative study. For this study, 257 HIV-1-positive specimens with quantified viral load values in serum were tested for sensitivity and specificity with three immunoassays, the Abbott enzyme-immunoassay (EIA), the SD Bioline and the Biotec EIA. The results are presented for the three assays and for various combinations of assays, one positive and one negative test, for both total and HIV-1-positive samples. Concordance between assays was estimated by the kappa coefficient. Performance characteristics for the determination of a positive test result varied considerably between all three assays (kappa coefficient from 0.43 to 0.65). A similar trend was found for the determination of the presence of HIV-1 (kappa coefficient from 0.12 to 0.38). For the determination of a negative test result, agreement was slightly better with the SD Bioline (kappa coefficient from 0.55 to 0.60). The kappa coefficients were considerably improved when testing was performed with a combination of two assays (SD Bioline + EIA positive, SD Bioline + EIA negative, or Biotec + EIA positive and SD Bioline + EIA negative) with kappa values > 0.77 (SD Bioline + EIA). The respective total concordance rates were 0.97, 0.93 and 0.95. Our findings demonstrate an unsatisfactory performance of each of the three assays with respect to the ability to detect the presence or absence of HIV-1. For high-concentration specimens (CD4>200), the Biotec EIA seems to be a suitable alternative for first-line testing.Q: How to use 'Literal' in a TOAD query I have a TOAD query that I am trying to take the value of a field, and use it as a literal, but it isn't working. Adore greaves, but we're not into those This is an archived article that was published on sltrib.com in 2013, and information in the article may be outdated. It is provided only for personal research purposes and may not be reprinted. No, we won't wear those underwear. "For the most part, the guys that wear them don't care much about them," says Martyn Wright, a London-based author and explorer of alternative fashion. But enough about the under-thigh box. About a year ago, Wright and a small group of like-minded people released a set of these fashionable garb called Primitive Parka. The idea: a men's costume based on outdated military gear, made of fur and recycled plastic and held together with twine and sewn with felt. "The idea was a way of exploring how men could be dressed differently, or be dressed differently without resorting to the stereotypical costumes," said Wright, a self-described "shaman and stylist." He and a few friends took off on an adventure to Afghanistan. They braved cold temperatures and dined on goat and camel meat, their only food for 10 days. In a country notorious for its medieval clothing codes, they came away with the idea for a collection of wearable accessories that would translate the same cozy and rustic feeling. One of their garments went to sell at a London boutique, while the others made their way to Northern Market in Ogden for Saturday's gala sale. The Collective will sell almost 20 unique items at the sale, including jackets, socks, skirts and everything in between. "There's a few things that are slightly more beautiful, or more eye-catching, than others, but every item is unique and has its own story," Wright says. "I wanted to create something that felt English but with a touch of the exotic. I wanted to make something that was a little bit dangerous, but had a feel of something that you would have in a hotel." We're looking forward to seeing the ingenuity in these new "exotic" items. In the meantime, we'll just stick to our adorably practical under-thigh box ⬚ and definitely not the knees. Thoughts? Leave them in the comments section, or tweet them @sltribdeals.
