The mammalian target of rapamycin (mTOR) complex 1 is a protein kinase and a central regulator of the nutrient-sensing pathways that regulate cell growth, proliferation, metabolism, and autophagy, and are required for cancer cell survival. mTOR complexes are formed by the mTOR (or FRAP), PRAS40, Raptor, and Deptor proteins. mTOR regulates the tuberous sclerosis complex-1-2 (TSC1/2) complex. TSC1/2 are GTPase-activating proteins that limit the activity of the Ras homolog enriched in brain (Rheb) GTPase, which is an upstream regulator of mTOR. Under nutrient conditions, TSC2 is phosphorylated by AKT and removes this inhibition to activate mTOR. mTOR signaling is triggered by an intracellular increase in the concentration of uncharged and acetylated fatty acids (FAs), known as the cellular FA-sensing pathway. In this pathway, TSC2 is also phosphorylated by AKT and suppresses Rheb GTPase. mTOR complex 1 is also activated by the inflammatory cytokines interleukin-6 (IL-6) and via the p38 mitogen-activated protein kinase (p38 MAPK). During the last decade, a large number of studies have been undertaken on mTOR signaling and its role in the pathophysiology of metabolic and cardiovascular diseases (CVD). This review is focused on the role of mTOR signaling in the pathogenesis of diabetes mellitus (DM), hypertension (HTN), atherosclerosis, and obesity./* * Copyright (C) 2007, 2008 Apple Inc.
